We can never really know what people are going through on the internet, because so few people share their full selves online. In a sad way, it's best to assume that not everything is okay. That way we can show true empathy, not attacks, not even a performance of fake kindness.

I confess my affection for the medieval notion of a "just price". en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Just\_pri... Got it from my dad, who thought it was just wrong for homebuilders to try to squeeze every last penny out of their customers.

I just realized that his opinion about the Springfield Homebuilders Association echoed Adam Smith: "People of the same trade seldom meet together, even for merriment and diversion, but the conversation ends in a conspiracy against the public, or in some contrivance to raise prices."
